Coed Gwent heddiw

Mae Coed Gwent yn parhau i fod yn hafan i fywyd gwyllt. Yn y gwanwyn gallwch grwydro ar hyd y llwybrau drwy garped o glychau'r gog a gwrandewch ar yr adar yn trydar eu cân. Gellir clywed y troellwr mawr yn aml, ac os ydych yn effro efallai cewch gipolwg ar bathew, gwiber, madfall neu garw. Gallwch weld morgrug y coed hefyd yng Nghoed Gwent, ac er eu bod yn bethau bach mae ganddynt bresenoldeb mawr. Chwiliwch am eu nythod (twmpathau ar y ddaear) sy'n sefyll 3-4 troedfedd uwchben y ddaear – er ceisiwch osgoi'r temtasiwn i eistedd arnynt!

Today at Wentwood

Wentwood remains a haven for wildlife. In spring you can wander along the paths surrounded by carpets of bluebells and listen to a harmony of bird song. The nightjar can often be heard, and if you stay alert you might be able to spot a dormouse, adder, lizard or deer. The wood ant can also be found at Wentwood, though very tiny it has a big presence. Look out for their nests (mounds on the ground) that stand 3-4 ft high – though don't be tempted to sit on them!

Hanes y goedwig

Mae gan Goed Gwent hanes maith a diddorol sy'n pontio dros 1,000 o flynyddoedd. Roedd unwaith yn faes hela ar gyfer Castell Cas-gwent, ac roedd ei breswylwyr yn gwneud y defnydd gorau posibl o ehangder y tir at gyfer eu helfeydd rhwysgfawr. Mae llwybrau hynafol, aelwydydd golosg ac olion hen felin hefyd yn rhoi rhyw syniad i ni o'i ddefnydd diwydiannol yn y gorffennol.

Coed Gwent oedd un o'r coedwigoedd cyntaf yn y DU lle plannwyd coed conifer cyn belled yn ôl â'r 1700au. Er hynny, ac yn enwedig yn ystod y ddau ryfel byd, cafodd llawer o'r coetir brodorol ei gwympo i'w ddefnyddio yn bren. Ailblannwyd yr ardaloedd hyn gyda choed conifer nad oeddent yn frodorol ond roeddent yn tyfu'n gyflym er mwyn darparu adnodd pren ar gyfer y genedl.

History of the wood

Wentwood has a long and illustrious history spanning over 1,000 years. It was once the hunting preserve for Chepstow Castle, whose inhabitants really made the most of the expansive land for their grand hunts. Ancient tracks, charcoal hearths and remains of an old mill also give us some idea of its past industrial use.

Wentwood was one of the first woods in the UK to be planted with conifer trees as far back as the 1700s. Since then, and especially during the first and second world wars, much of the remaining native woodland was felled for timber. These areas were largely replanted with quick-growing non-native conifer trees to provide a timber resource for the nation.

Coed Gwent – y dyfodol

Rydym yn adfer darnau o Goed Gwent fel coetir brodorol brasddeiliog naturiol. Byddwch yn gallu mwynhau'r coed, y planhigion a'r anifeiliaid sy'n gysylltiedig â'r cynefin pwysig hwn. Mae hwn yn gynllun tymor hir ac uchelgeisiol, ond mae natur ar ein hochor ni. Er i'r mwyafrif o'r coed brodorol gael eu cwympo, bydd yr hadau o'r coed sy'n weddill a phlanhigion eraill yn y coetir yn adfywio yn gyflym wrth i fwy o oleuni dreiddio i lawr y coetir. Gallwn gynhyrchu'r amodau hyn drwy waredu'r coed conifer yn raddol.

Wentwood – the future

We are restoring parts of Wentwood to its natural native broadleaved woodland. You will be able to enjoy the trees, plants and animals that are associated with this important habitat. This is a long term and ambitious plan, but nature is on our side. Although most of the native trees were felled, the seeds from those that still remain and other woodland plants will soon regenerate as more light penetrates the woodland floor. We can create these conditions by gradually removing the conifer trees.
